INFLUENCE OF HOPE. A Paper read before the Middleburg Lyceum, BY JAMES B. BAKER .-- CONCLUDED.

Hope not only gilds the heights of fame and lifts the arm that aspires to reach them, but she also throws her light in "poverty's sequestered dale," and cheers the hearts of Phosphate of Lime..... such as are "unpitied by the world, unknown to fame." As we see the humble peasant toiling on, day after day, spending the strength and flower of his days for the pressing necessities of life, as "he deals his scan-

"To friendless babes, and weeps to give no more," We might think that life was all a blank to him, that surely Hope found no lodging-place in his bosom, and had no word of comfort to whisper in his ear. But she tells him that fortune will not always press with so heavy a hand upon him; that though he may have to bear the heat and burden of the day, the evening of life will be protected and made pleasant by those very little ones he is now struggling to shelter from the blast; that though the ascent of the hill has been difficult and toilsome, the downward side will be smoothed, and his last resting place will be watered by the tears of affection .-Thus his burden is made light, and he forgets the sorrows of the present by looking at | Soluble Phosphate of Lime the joys of the future.

Hope not only accompanies man from the cradle to the grave, takes up her abode equally in the palace and the hut, but is the main spring that gives motion to all the actions of life in all its various departments. If man were left to grope his way in dark-ness, if there were no rays from the star of Hope, lighting up the object he had in view, and illumining the road that leads to its attainment, sad, indeed, would be his condition. The direst want would scarce be able to rouse him to action, and mere desire. stripped of the expectation of success, would be utterly powerless to overcome his inertia.

strongest and most beautiful part of his composition, and moves him not only to do, but to suffer, even unto death. The man of science or inventive genius feels its influence, as grappling with some exhibited, if required, un mighty thought, which his mind has seized, he makes it the object of intense study by day, and the prominent figure of his dreams by night. He toils on day after day, or even year after year-failure succeeds failurebut still he works on, straining to the utmost every power of mind and body. Hope urges him on, telling that success must crown his labors, and will place him in the highest niche of the temple of science or record his name in blazing characters as one of the greatest benefactors of his race.

Finally, the point of his desires may be reached, and bounding with joy he makes known his discovery to the world; but wise in its own conceit, incredulous and unappreciating, it only laughs at him as the blind devotee of a mere whim of the brain. Despair struggles to get possession of his soul and drive him from his object; but Hope guards all the extrances and repels every assault. He still clings with unflinehing grasp to his long-cherished thought, and as the result of his toils he forces skeptical man to wield the mighty power of steam, or send his words with thought-like speed along the wires of the telegraph.

What was it that caused the men of '76 to suffer so much and so long, when at times scarcely a ray of light penetrated the night of darkness which enveloped them? Hope cheered them up with the thought that victory would finally perch on their standard, and with it would come all the joys and blessings of peace: That their country freed from the fetters of tyranny would rise up in majesty and power, and though they might suffer, or even fall in the conflict, still their children would reap a rich and abundant harvest from their toils, and generations yet unborn would rise up and call them blessed. the shrill blasts of Valley Forge would have sung the last dirge of liberty, and the driving spows would have the string spows would be string and the driving spows would be string and the driving spows would be string to the string spows would be string as the string spows would be string to the string spows would be string to the string to the string spows would be string to the string to ing snows would have been her winding sheet-despotism, in proud confidence, would sheet—despotism, in proud confidence, would have raised still higher its hideous head, and have raised still higher its hideous head, and PHOSPHATE OF LIME.

It is a glorious privilege that man at all times and under all circumstances is permitted to cheer his heart, and lift from it the clouds of gloom and despondency by the indulgence of Hope. The young, especially, most as-siduously pay their devotions at her altar. and by them it should be remembered that the realization of Hope is usually the result of action. Hope is the guiding star that leads us on to the attainment of our purposes; but seldom, very seldom, does she bless man with the possession of his desires, while he himself remains inactive.

Our Hopes will be but as day-dreams without effort on our part. Demosthenes hoped in our possession, are very strong, and from sourto be an orator, and hoped too, it would seem. under many disadvantages. But did he quictly sit down, and with folded arms wait till some happy stroke of fortune should lift him to the desired position, or till the vigor of his mind by its innate strength should rise superior to opposing obstacles? Certainly not; but he sensibly thought that what mended by Samuel W. Johnson. Professor of was being hoped for was worth being worked Analytical and Agricultural Chemistry, Yale Colfor! It may be said that Hope with a syren song lures man into many dangers, and draws him to the pursuit of objects which oft-times fly before him and elude his grasp; that by it his desires are too firmly fixed, and disappointment when it comes is rendered more bitter. Let it be so. Cicero in speaking of the immortality of the soul used the following language: "If I err in my belief in the soul's immortality, I willingly err; nor am I willing for that to be snatched from me, which gives me pleasure while I live." So in respect to Hope; let not its influence be withdrawn from man, for in truth it gives him great pleasure in life.

IN calling the attention of the public to this val-uable and recently discovered deposit of this fertilizing article, we will merely state, that like all other phosphatic GUANOS, its most valuable constituent is phosphoric acid, or bone phosphate of lime; and that its mercantile value, as compared with other GUANOS of its kind, may be easily determined by the amount of phosphoric acid or bone phosphate of lime it contains. In order, therefore, to give the public a thorough knowledge of what SOMBRERO GUANO does contain, we beg But with this latter element it forms the to refer to the following list of eminent chemists in different parts of the world, who have analyzed different cargoes, from average samples taken by exhibited, if required, under the original signature
